

Anthony Mavunde

(mah-SAH-noo)

Minister of Minerals
United Republic of Tanzania

Addressed as: Honorable Minister | Office held since: June 2023

Anthony Mavunde is an up-and-coming politician who brings his boundless energy, legal expertise, and technological vision to Tanzania's minerals portfolio.

▣ Minister of Reform

Mavunde is eager to modernize and streamline the mining sector, arguing for transparency, accountability, and new technologies—including drones for mineral exploration and digital systems for management—are key to better outcomes.

▣ Servant of the People

Mavunde carefully curates an image of service, including by calling himself a “servant of the people” in his social media profile. He prioritizes connecting with his audiences and relevant stakeholders.

Mavunde is part of a small cohort of senior government officials in their forties. His retention as Minerals Minister following the October 2025 election—one of only 11 ministers kept in the same portfolio—signals President Samia's confidence in his performance.

WHY THEY MATTER

Mavunde is committed to proving that "Tanzania is safe for investment," while ensuring that mining delivers tangible benefits to Tanzanians through value addition, local content, and youth empowerment.

▣ Delivering Results

Under Mavunde's tenure, Tanzania's mining sector reached a milestone: revenue hit 1 trillion shillings by June 2025. He has championed major projects including the $523 million Nyanzaga gold mine—the largest gold development in Tanzania in over 17 years.

▣ Cleaning House

Mavunde has taken an aggressive stance against dormant licenses, revoking 73 exploration and medium-scale mining permits in November 2025 after holders failed to develop their concessions.

The Minister wants to deliver real benefits to fellow Tanzanians through his work in the mining sector. He has remarked that "our vision isn't simply to dig up minerals, it's to ignite the engines of prosperity."

MEETING WITH THEM

Mavunde is a proactive and decisive leader who uses humility, humor, and his personal engagement to achieve his goals.

▣ Hands-On Approach

Mavunde is often well-prepared and on top of his brief, and he is quick to address challenges firsthand. When concerns are raised by stakeholders, he will visit the mining site to understand the issue.

▣ Rapport-Building

The Minister brings a personal touch to his relationships, disarming his interlocutors with his authenticity and honesty. While he can be surprisingly direct about sensitive issues, he cushions it with diplomatic language to remain on good terms.

While formal in his speeches and presentations, his social media posts reveal a more playful side: singing at events, backslapping colleagues, and liberally using emojis to show his gratitude.

ON THEIR MIND

▣ Tanzanian Buys East Africa's biggest Media Outlet

Tanzanian business magnate Rostam Azizi in mid-March bought the majority share of Nairobi-based Nation Media Group, East Africa's largest media house. Azizi was named Tanzania's first dollar billionaire by Forbes magazine in 2013.

▣ Tanzania Ranks Fourth for Mining Investments in Africa

The Fraser Institute in early March revealed that Tanzania has significantly improved its global standing as a destination for international mining, placing 34th overall and 4th in Africa.

▣ Moody's Affirms Tanzania's Rating

Moody's Ratings in February affirmed Tanzania's B1 local currency and foreign currency long-term issuer ratings today and maintained a stable outlook. The rating reflects the country's weak institutional framework and low incomes balanced against strong growth momentum and resilience to shocks

▣ U.S.-Tanzanian Relations

Following President Samia's marred election, the United States in December 2025 announced it was reviewing its ties with Tanzania, citing concerns over investment, governance, and restrictions on religious freedom and free speech.

NETWORK

While Mavunde is building close ties with U.S. government officials and business firms, he also has engaged other countries, including Belarus, China, Italy, Russia, and the United Kingdom.

Mavunde has highlighted the potential of the Kabanga Nickel Project as a model for U.S.-Tanzania economic cooperation. Though he is positive about China's role in producing graphite, he has shown a willingness to restrict Chinese mining operations when conflicts arise with local, small-scale miners.

Mavunde has built a strong network within the CCM, earning President Samia's trust as evidenced by his retention in the November 2025 cabinet reshuffle. His role in the CCM youth movement has likely aided his ascension in the party's ranks.

Mavunde seems keenly aware of the challenges of navigating the internal cliques within ruling Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM), thriving under President Samia and past presidents Magufuli and Kikwete. As he leverages his accomplishments to fuel his political rise, he takes care to praise party leadership and avoid missteps.

CONTROVERSIES

Mavunde has largely avoided major controversies, though his enforcement actions and rapid rise have drawn some scrutiny.

▪ License Crackdown

His November 2025 revocation of 73 mining licenses has generated pushback from operators who claim the enforcement is heavy-handed. The ministry issued 205 default notices, including some companies holding licenses since 2013 without commencing operations.

▪ Yanga Loyalties

Mavunde's passion for Young Africans Sports Club (Yanga) has earned him some detractors. He has faced scrutiny regarding his commitment to his ministerial duties versus his involvement in Yanga, prompting then-president Magufuli to question whether he was spending too much time on the football club.

His relative youth has occasionally prompted questions about experience, though his technical competence and consistent delivery have generally quieted critics.
